Helen was killed by her new "best friend", Vincent Lopiano. He convinced her to join a group of anarchic hackers (Black Fox) by reminding her of her past as a young rebel. The plan was installing a harmless virus in the software used by some banks to test her hacking ability, or at least this is what Vincent told her when he gave her a hard disk with the virus. However, the truth is that Vincent wanted to use that code to rob the banks through multiple encrypted microtransactions. This would have made Helen an accomplice of those thefts. Helen managed to discover Vincent's plan only after having installed the virus. Worried by the possible consequences of her involvement she decided to talk with Vincent. She invited him to her house and told him that she wanted to confess the truth to her boss. Vincent tried to persuade her not to speak, but, having understood that it wouldn't have worked, he killed her. Despite the rumors floating around, Helen was deeply in love with her boyfriend. She had even planned a trip to Hawaii with him. Furthermore, Helen didn't have an affair with her boss. After leaving his wife, her boss came out as gay. Vincent simulated a suicide by using the first thing he had at hand, the climbing rope he kept in his car.
